Earn cash in art contest

Entries sought for Land Combat Expo

Do you know someone with artistic talent? U.S. Army Europe is looking for a work of art to use as its marketing tool for the 2005 Land Combat Expo.

"The theme for the 2005 LCE is 'USAREUR at War Today and Transforming for the Future,'" said Maj. William Stewart, Expo planner.

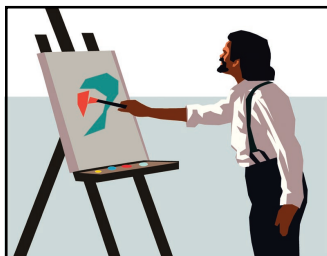

"We are looking for artwork that illustrates USAREUR's contributions to the War on Terrorism, the latest in military technology, and preparations for the future."

It is open to all U.S. ID cardholders.

The first, second and third place entries in each category are worth $1,000, $750 and $500 respectively. A panel of art professionals will select winners during the second week of June. Categories are: ♣ Soldiers (active duty, Reserve and National Guard); ♣ DoD civilians; ♣ Family members, age 13 and up; ♣ Retirees.

The judges will evaluate entries on four strengths: ✍ Storytelling ability — how well does the work illustrate the theme? ✍ Technical quality; ✍ Originality; ✍ Creativity.

The USAREUR commander and the Board of Directors will select one Best in Show. "The big winner will be the centerpiece of the 2005 LCE advertising campaign and earn its artist an additional $1,000," said Stewart.

"Winning entries will also be posted for everyone to admire on the USAREUR website at www.hqusareur.army.mil and displayed during the Land Combat Expo. USAREUR will invite all winners to the Land Combat EXPO to receive their awards at a formal presentation," Stewart added.

All entries must qualify as either fine art or illustration. The size must be no less than 8x11 inches and no greater than 12x16 inches.

Fine Art for this competition is defined as a two-dimensional work created by any freehand method using wet-based mediums. The primary mediums used to create artwork in this category are watercolor, oil paint, pastels and airbrush.

Illustration is defined as a two-dimensional work created by any freehand method using dry-base media. Artwork accepted in this category includes line art, cartoons and sketches (including field sketches). The primary media used to create artwork in this category are pencil, charcoal and chalk. Ink is also considered a dry-based medium unless applied using a wash technique.

Team entries are not permitted. Entrants can only compete in one of the four categories, although they may enter more than one piece in their category. Work completed as a professional business enterprise cannot be submitted.

Each entrant must submit an entry form attached to the back of the artwork. To download a copy visit the USAREUR home page at www.hqusareur.army.mil and click on "Land Combat Art Contest" in the left column. Entries will be mailed to either of the following addresses: HQ USAREUR PAO, c/o Steve Sanderson, AEAPA - Production, APO AE 09014; or Headquarters USAREUR, ATTN: OCPA (Mr. Sanderson), Romerstrasse 135, 69126 Heidelberg, Germany.

Entries become property of USAREUR and will not be returned. Any entry may be used, altered or published as USAREUR and its designees see fit. Entry packages must be received by June 3.

Honing minds, bodies at Hainerberg

Students, teachers share multi-cultural opportunities

By Karl Weisel

104th Area Support Group Public Affairs Office

Making the big school experience a rewarding, intellectually and physically challenging time for all students is the goal at Wiesbaden's Hainerberg Elementary School.

Principal Barbara Hickman, who has taught in or administered large and small schools both for the Department of Defense Dependents Schools-Europe and stateside, said having such a multi-cultural student and teacher population provides a wealth of learning opportunities.

"This is an incredible opportunity," said Hickman, describing the "joys of big schools. Children get a chance to meet so many different children from other cultures, which fits right in with living in a global society."

That philosophy of expanding learning opportunities and potential for student growth is reflected in the wide range of classroom and after-school activities available for Hainerberg students.

For first-grade teacher Laura Childs, sharing each other's heritage is a chance to make geography lessons more intimate and meaningful. As part of their social studies curriculum the students created two large wall maps outside their classroom featuring photos of each first-grader showing the different places their families originally called home.

"I thought it would be interesting for kids to explore where they are from," said Childs. "I sent home a letter with the students asking Moms and Dads to share their heritage."

"That's one of the neat things about having a military population — the diversity," said Childs. "It's a great learning experience as far as promoting their cultural and map reading skills. I'm anxious for the parents to see what they've done. We might end the year with a multi-cultural get-together — have a time for the students and parents to get together for sharing."

Students in Linda Childs' first-grade class at Hainerberg Elementary School point out places where their families originated on maps depicting the United States and the world on the wall outside their classroom.

Club, Art Club and Jogging Club are only a few of the many other ways students continue to expand their horizons at Hainerberg.

Both teachers and students have joined school nurse Beatrice Friebe in the after-school Jogging Club, which meets twice a week for a fitness jog or walk.

"In school we're trying to cram in the academics, but the physical part sometimes falls by the wayside," said Friebe, a former military member and running enthusiast, was inspired to form the Jogging Club after addressing the national problem of obesity and physical fitness at a DoDDS-Europe-sponsored conference.

"We're a reflection of our nation," she said, pointing out how for security reasons and because of other distractions such as computer games and television, children spend much less time outside being active than youths did in the past.

"This is meant to instill in them something they can do regularly. It (physical fitness) needs to be part of their lives," Friebe said, adding that she has already seen improvement. "Their parents say they have also seen a difference. The students now talk about what types of snacks they should eat rather than grabbing the highest, emptiest caloric snacks.

"Some of the teachers have also joined the club," she said. "They come to walk. It's nice for the students to see them taking part."

"People talk about redeployment, but I think reintegration can be a bigger challenge," said Hickman, explaining that with so many parents facing another deployment to Iraq at the end of this year, the school has become a central focus in the lives of students more than ever. "We're working really hard as a school to reach out to parents and to give them extra support they can't always get in the military. We see the school as the calm in the storm for the students."

Being such a large school provides a huge parental population from which to draw in support of its Parent Teacher Organization, said the school principal, adding, "We have an incredible PTO."

Among the many support and encouragement roles members of the PTO play at Hainerberg are sponsoring the Student of the Week program, yearbook and Birthday Wall, said Laurie Laurella and Katie Erzen, co-presidents of the PTO. "Every week a student from each class is recognized as the Student of the Week," said Laurella. "And by year's end every child in the school will be recognized."

"They're very excited about it," she said, explaining that certificates are displayed in the hallway."

Teachers and students are featured on the school's Birthday Wall which is another popular attraction and a way for everyone to become more familiar with each other, said Erzen.

"We've sponsored book fairs. We've held bingos. We just went through a health seminar for fifth-graders, and over Christmas we took everybody in the school to see the movie 'Polar Express,'" Laurella said. "We also sell spirit wear."

"We started the Santa's Shop a few years ago," said Erzen. "It's a chance for students to shop for presents without their parents. A group of volunteer parents helped wrap the presents for the students."

A school dance for parents and students was another popular PTO-sponsored event. "For some parents it was the first time they got a chance to see all of the kids in the classroom interacting with their parents," Erzen said.

"We're here to help in any way we can," said Erzen, explaining that with such a large school there is a wealth of knowledge and experience among parents. "We want parents to tap into their resources — they have a lot of experience. It's especially nice when we can have more fathers involved." And parents can earn valuable volunteer hours while supporting their children through the PTO.

Membership in the school's PTO costs $2 per parent per year.

Parents are encouraged to volunteer as board members because many of the current members will move on next year or their children will advance to the middle school. "We could always use more help," said Laurella.

Helping students make the transition from elementary school to middle school is also an important part of the Hainerberg experience, said Hickman, former Wiesbaden Middle School assistant principal, describing the school's formal promotion ceremony for fifth-graders and orientations aimed at easing the process.

Having a strong team has made the job of managing a large school much easier, said Hickman who took over the helm at the beginning of the school year. "I was really looking forward to team building. With such a large school we had teachers on one level who might not see teachers on another for weeks. I think there's been tremendous growth this year."
